This is the announcement we have been building toward. As of today, the Say Yes Foundation officially launches the Great Unlearning - a free, one-hour presentation for the people who function beautifully and hurt quietly. No cost, no camera, no catch. Just a room where being seen is the point instead of the risk.

Who this room is for

Functional adults still stuck in shame - the ones who read the books, understand their patterns, and still cannot seem to change them. And anyone who was ever taught, by a family or a church or a culture, that who they are is not okay. If you have spent years performing fine while wondering what is wrong with you, the answer is: nothing. You were taught a story about your worth that was never true.

What happens in the hour

The teaching: where shame actually comes from, and why insight alone has never been enough to dissolve it. A live practice you can begin using the same day. And a room held with care by people who have sat on both sides of this work. Nothing is asked of anyone on the night. You may sit in the back and simply listen - and you will still leave with something true.

At a glance

Length	Cost	Format
60 minutes, plus time for conversation afterward	Free - always	Teaching and a live practice, in person or virtual. No camera required.

For organizations: we come to you

If your organization serves this vulnerable community - community centers, recovery meetings, Pride centers, faith communities people are leaving, youth and family services - contact us to arrange a presentation at your facility, at no cost. Meet the work first. If it belongs in your community, we will talk about what carrying it forward looks like. There is no obligation attached to a first session, ever.

The belief underneath everything we teach

You were never the problem. You were taught that you were. The shame you carry is not proof of who you are; it is the residue of what you were taught, often inside systems that called conditional love "love." Alice Miller had a name for it: poisonous pedagogy. Our answer is its opposite - healthy pedagogy, where being seen is safe and worth is unconditional. And anything that was taught can be unlearned - not with another insight, but with practice, in company. That is what the hour begins.
